Ready to Teach
TEACHER LEADERSHIP FOR SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT: THE BOTTOM LINE

The teacher leader concept is not about training teachers to become school administrators, nor about “teacher power.” Instead, it is about empowering teachers to take a more active role in school improvement.

The Millennial Mindset

Millennials draw upon their purpose and passion to understand “why” something is being done, not just “what” is being done.

Millennials are seeking more opportunity to voice their ideas and views, and advocate for themselves, rather than to silently comply with whatever directives are handed down.

Prior to the start of Senior Field Experience, Teacher Candidates complete a self evaluation and select 3 Performance Standards to enable their College Supervisor to offer support throughout the practicum.

At the conclusion of Senior Field Experience, Teacher Candidates assess themselves on all 10 Performance Standards.
Spring of the Senior Year

● Prior to Clinical Practice, Teacher Candidates and Mentor Teachers spend an entire day engaged in professional development at the Covenant College Partnership Meeting.
  ○ Teacher Candidates use the 10 Performance Standards to create a personal reflection
  ○ Teacher Candidates and College Supervisors meet to discuss the upcoming practicum

● During Clinical Practice
  ○ Midterm Self Assessment

● After Clinical Practice
  ○ Reflective Conference

Identification and Opportunities

Teacher Leaders Need:

- Opportunity
- To Be Creative
- Trust, Sense of Value
- Control
- Feelings of Success
The first mindset must be that every teacher has the potential to be an expert in something. Without this mindset, one is simply choosing, often by their own opinions and preferences who would be a leader. When in fact, the best leaders are those that can work along with others and are respected by their peers for their “expertise.”
The best ideas, the deepest thoughts happen in downtime. Teacher Leaders use this think time to be creative in their thinking.

Many schools have the common practice of giving the solutions to problems for the teachers to implement.

Teacher Leaders are creative thinkers and get excited about solutions that are applicable to their students. These solutions are often more effective.
Teacher Leaders need to know that their solutions are valued, that the administrators trust their judgment.

Teachers want to share what they do best, they want to inspire others with their work.
Teacher Leaders need to work independently. I often see “leaders” chosen that really are “followers.”

Leaders are not those that take a list and are able to apply it and check off the boxes.

Leaders are those that can take the list, analyze it and apply it appropriately. (This often can get mixed up with them not following directions.)
Feelings of Success

- The freedom to succeed or fail.
- is a risk. It is risky to share with educational colleagues that all are experts in something.
- There must be a safe place to attempt to lead with the freedom to share failures. This then allows corrections to be made that produces success.
